

Leif Skiftenes Flak is professor of information systems and Director of CeDiT, Centre for Digital Transformation at the University of Agder (UiA), Norway. Dr. Flak chaired the research group on eGovernment at UiA. His research interests are on the nature of digital transformation in general with emphasis on stakeholder related issues and benefits management in particular. His work has been published in information systems and e-Government journals and conference proceedings. Prof. Flak is member of several international interest groups and associations and is involved in various research and practice projects in Norway. He is currently involved in program committees for a number of conferences and is regularly invited to give talks to both practice and academic audiences. Prof. Flak is currently also serving on the editorial advisory board of Information Polity and Transforming Government: People, Process and Policy, Government Information Quarterly and International Journal of Electronic Government Research.